The Conservatives Formally Enter Upon Their Responsible Duties.

Cheering the Marquis of Salisbury as He Enters the Lords.

Princess Beatrice Will Receive a Royal Dowry of Six Thousand Pounds.

The London "Times"" Opinion. LONDON, June 25,-Sir Nationiel Rothschild, Sir Evelyn Barry, and Mr. John Mortry, will be raised to the peerage.

The Times, in an editorial referring to the correspondence between Gladstone and the Marquis of Salisbury, says it wonders why so much solemn diplomacy should be necessary to accomplish the end in view. It says Salisbury is doing what he began by protesting that he would never think of doing. The Times commends Salisbury, however, for finally acting on the grounds of practical wisdom

The Navy's New Cruisers.

Washington, June 25 .- It is thought the three new craisers being built by John Roach -the "Boston," "Atlanta" and "Chicago,'will prove to be good, staunch vessels in every sense of the word, notwithstanding every sense of the word, notwithstanding the many defects reported by the Examining Board in the "Dolphin." These officers think the Advisory Board were much better qualified to design a cruiser than a dispatch boat, and that there will be but little, if any, fault to find with the designs of the cruisers. If there are any defects in the construction of the vessels, it is thought that Mr. Roach will have ample time to remedy them, and will take advantage of the criti-cisms of the "Dolphin" to prevent any simi-Bosron, June 25,-"The Journals of General Gordon at Khartoum," voluminous extracts of which are given out to the newspapers to-day, will make a crown octave volume of over 500 pages, will be published by Houghton, Mifflin & Co., of this city, June 30th. The book will contain an etched portrait of Gordon, two maps and thirty illustrations, reproducing fac-similies from sketches by himself. The diaries are in six parts, and each on the outside has the remark, sometimes repeated three times, that "it should be pruned down prior to publica-

In this connection he writes: "It is not easy to get over a feeling that a hope existed of no exover a feeling that a hope existed of no expedition being necessary, owing to our having fallen." He believed the Soudan should be given to the Turks, and incidently referring to India, says: "India to England is not an advantage; it is the centre of all party intrigue; while, if our energy were devoted elsewhere it would produce ten-fold." party intrigue; while, it our energy were de-voted elsewhere it would produce ten-fold. "OH, OUR GOVERNMENT, OUR GOVERNMENT!" He writes, "What has it not to answer for, not to me, but those poor people. I declare, if I thought the town wished the Mahdi I would give it up, so much do I respect free will."

The passage apparently indicating the tone of the entire book is the following: "I could," he says, "write volumes of pent-up wrath on this subject, if I did not believe things are ordained, and that all work for the best."

A GENIUS FOR ART.

Every Boy and Girl Has an Instinct for Artistic Employment.

[London Art Journal.]

There is no branch of human knowledge n which so much old fashioned sham surrives as in writing or talking about art. There are few men who can discuss it without going into ineffable spasms and æsthetic raptures. The cure for this is to be found in a varied knowledge of arts, and in practical education. Raphnel, Albert Durer, Cellini. Michael Angelo, were the results (not the causes) of a state of society in which every workmen was capable of executing decorative designs, and even of making them. Now the world has taken from the ineffable asthetic transcendentalists, firstly, the idea that said the said to be a superposed to the said to be a superposed to the said to be that art in the main means only the making of pictures and statues; and, secondly, that unless a child manifests an innate talent or born gift for art, it should not be expected to study it. There are children who have a genius for art, but of these there are not more than one in 10,000 or 15,000.

"Why, Flossie," said Jerome, "what a swell you are! What are you doing now?"

"I'm a professional beauty now, dear boy."

"A what?"

"A professional beauty. I sit for photographers for celebrated beauties. To-day, graphers for celebrated beauties. To-day, found in the second year of instruction who could not design a pattern and then execute it in embroidery, or wood, clay, sheet metal, leather, mosaic, or other material. I have found by full experience and hard work. found, by full experience and hard work, that every child in every school may, by a certain and very simple method of training, be made into an artisan, and from this point be made into an artisan, and tron this point become either a practical mechanic or an artist. It is the proper preparation for either. As easy embroidery is the best be-ginning to lead little girls up to prosuc plain sewing, so the boy who begins with design and modeling and carving, makes not only the best shoomaker, or smith, or carrenter.

sewing, so the boy who begins with design and modeling and carving, makes not only the best shoemaker, or smith, or carpenter, in less than the usual time, but also a better sailor, or farmer, or miner, or collier. For there is no calling in life in which developed quickness of perception and constructiveness is not a great power. Thus I foundand herein high authorities in education agree with me—that decorative art was the best step toward more practical work.

It was many years ago, during my former residence in England, that I began to seriously study the problem of manual industry as a branch of all education. In the very beginning of my reflection on this subject, I was much struck by the fact that no hard or prosaic employment, no trades, in fact, could with success be taught to young children of both sexes. All over the world, efforts to teach boys under 14 years of age a trade have not succeeded, because neither muscles nor brains are sufficiently developed at that age for a child to do a man's task. The principle on which I would base instruction is, that a child not as yet capable of learning a trade or a serious or severe branch of industry can, however, easily master all branches of decorative art, and that these form a fit introduction to more practical work.

We all know that to mere infants, a box of practical work.

We all know that to mere infants, a box of broidery from memory, inlaying, repousse, and even jewelry, with a degree of skill which in Europe no one expects save from grown ap and highly trained artists. I reflected, or observed, that all over the east, and in southern Europe, south Germany, and Tyrol, mere children executed art work of many kinds, especially wood carving, with so much skill that it has a market value, without its preventing them from attending school.

AN OFFENSIVE PARTISAN.

One of the heads of division whose resignation was asked for during the week, went on Friday to see Secretary Manning with a view of getting some mitigation of his sentence. He was received with much kindness by the Secretary, who asked him if he had not all along anticipated removal when a Democratic administration should come in? "I really cannot see," said the Secretary, "how you could expect anything Madern, June 25.—Official reports of new when a Democratic administration should come in? "I really cannot see," said the Secretury, "how you could expect anything else." The Republican official demurred to this, and said that he had faithfully performed his duties, was not a politician, and no one had complained of him. "Well. now, as to that," said the Secretary. "I will let you be the judge yourself. Here are a pile of letters which I have received from people in your district. Read them over and let me know if you think a Democratic Secretary ought to be blamed for asking you to give way for a Democrat," The ex-bureau chief read over the letters with amazement. His sins rose up in judgment against him. He was pronounced by the writers to be "red hot" in his politics; a frequent correspondent of Republican newspapers, extracts from his letters being appended; his journeys home at election time were noted; reports of his speeches at town meetings were given, and his immediate removal was demanded as the only thing that would pacify his Democratic neighbors. When he had got through with the batch of letters he handed them back to the Secretary. "I have not another word to say," said he. "If I were in your place I would do just as you do. I am sorry I troubled you. I am an offensive partisan, but I'm blessed if I knew it until now." — Washington Capital, now."-Washington Capital,

Pardy, June 25.—All accounts received from Tonquin show the ravages of disease from Tonquin show the ravag tell-tale streaks of gray in the brown mustache emphasized his fifty years. He stopped short in the middle of a story when interrupted, and was quite willing to tell of the few plans he had formed for residence abroad. "I expect to leave about June 10th," he explained, "but he-yond that there is nothing fixed." The conversation drifted off to general sub-jects, and by easy stages led up to poker. His reputation as a skillful player was touched upon, and the question hazarded whether that, as in the case of Minister Schenck, had anything to do with his appointment. The soft hat was pushed rakishly to one side on the back of his head, and his gray eyes gleamed unpleasantly for a moment as he broke out with.

The papers have gone entirely too far in making common talk of my prowess at the card-table, I am not a great player. I play a modest little game. Every gentleman in Kentucky plays the game and so do I. But I do not sit down with everybody. I play only with friends, among gentlemen, and then only in a moderate way. I cannot see why I should be singled out as America's national player."

It was explained that the appointment of Minister Schenck, who introduced the game into England, the appointment last month of Warren Green, of Kentucky, a skillful player, to the richest consulate in Japan, and his own appointment, argued that there was some subtle connection between diplomatic business and the game of poker.

"I suppose," he said reflectively, pulling his hat back to its normal position,
"I suppose they believe that a man who plays poker well can do anything. In the case of Minister Schenck, that great player was certainly wrong. He himself open to criticism by publishing his book on the subject. It may be true that the work was for private circulation, but as a representative of this country, he should not have published it. The rules were too good. As for myself, my health has been bad, and I have not played for a long time, so it is singular that the New York papers should have pitched into me as they have done. They have swollen the matter out of all proportion. The Sun has been most severe upon me, and yet I am told that Mr. Dana never goes to bed without first indulging in a game of draw, and he doesn't play well,

Mr. Winchester spoke warmly of his friend Henry Watterson, as he moved off, and a friend standing by told of the only time when the life-long friendship between the two became near being ruptured. It was after a protracted siege at the game, and Winchester stood roll-ing a wad of bills into a convenient roll. He stopped, placed one hand affection-ately on the editor's shoulder and said with a yawn: "It is no fun playing with you." The great man looked his sur-prise, and the new minister added ambiguously, but with conviction: "It s too easy, too easy," and both went

The basis for this facuety is the instinct for constructiveness. And as it seeks for artistic employment in its early stage, I firmly believe that those who begin in childhood with art, will, in the end, prove to be the most intelligent practical mechanics. Egypt, which was in ancient days the mother of learning, proved to be strangely enough in this case also my instructor, for it was in Miss Whately's school in Cairo that, on seeing two very little girls executing each one side of the same piece of elegant embroidery, it flashed upon me that if mere babes could execute such art work, this must be the kind of hand labor with which to begin in schools.

The next day I found in the bazars numbers of young of both sexes executing embers of young of both sexes of the same piece of the same piece of elegant embroiders, it is sentencing a man to death that take comfort from the reflection that many of the wisest philosophers of the day, iniormed him that the other day, iniormed him that the other day, iniormed him that the other day, iniormed him that the comfort from the reflection that many of the day, iniormed him that the com
